

MARIA GLYKA

Maria Glyka has studied at the Slade School of Fine Art, UCL, in the Athens School of Fine Arts and at the Vakalo Art and Design College. In her work, she brings together external and internal spaces playing with the boundaries of painting, installation and structures made out of paper and cardboard. She investigates everyday characters from urban space, which then connects with inner spaces, used objects and fictional memories. She projects images on their surface being interested on the creation of parallel actions, sounds, images, direct and indirect associations through this process. She has exhibited her work and taken part in many residencies internationally. She is currently teaching contemporary art practice at the Slade Summer School, UCL and Art and Design as an accredited lecturer of the University of Derby in the Vakalo Art and Design College, Athens.
